Indiana University's new $39.8 million home for the School of Informatics, Computing and Engineering will be dedicated Friday. The ceremony is part of Luddy Fest, a week's worth of events celebrating Luddy Hall, the 130,000-square-foot, four-story building at Woodlawn and Cottage Grove avenues.

The new facility allows the departments of computer science, engineering and library science to be under the same roof. Years of rapid growth forced classes and faculty into more than a dozen buildings.
